Good Roads Throughout The West

Visitors from Europe to America, and the thousands of our Canadian boys who went overseas between 1914 and 1918, cannot refrain from noting the sharp contrast afforded by the character of the roads in European countries with those so generally prevalent on this side of the Atlantic, and the contrast is by no means favorable to America.

It is recognized, of course, that the older civilizations of Europe, with their teeming millions of people, and their comparative small areas as contrasted with the enormous extent and sparse population of Canada, do not present parallel cases, but, after making due allowance for these conditions, it must be admitted that it is time that the people of Canada seriously grappled with the problem, huge as it is, of providing better highways.

Poor roads, or none at all, are inseparable from pioneer countries. The untrod spaces must first be explored, trails broken, and very ordinary routes of travel provided. Only with the influx of population and permanent settlement can the work of first class road-making be carried on. But despite all the handicaps of an enormous extent of territory and a small population Canada has the world in the construction of railways, and its pioneer railway, still young in years, is a marvel of efficiency, a source of national pride, and of admiration in other lands.

But Canada's roads! Taken as a whole they are execrable, a source of national humiliation and shame, unworthy of an intelligent, enterprising people. Whatever excuse there may have been in the past for the neglect of the primary arteries of transportation and communication, the excuse will no longer hold good. The urgent need of dealing with the problem in a big, intelligent and aggressive manner is now clear. It has been recognized in the United States where great strides in the work of improvement have been made in recent years. It is now time that Canada woke up, and, especially the Western Provinces, Quebec and Ontario are tackling the problem, and the West must do likewise.

The introduction of the automobile and its now almost universal use has forced the importance and value of good roads upon the attention of all. Important as good roads have always been in the internal economy of the country, they have taken added importance and value with the coming of the motor driven car. Poor roads were never cheap at any time, and the cost of building good roads and maintaining them is small in comparison to the cost of bad roads in these days of the automobile.

It is false economy, penny-wise and pound foolish, to refrain from the necessary expenditure for good roads and then, as individual citizens and taxpayers, pay out many times the amount in loss of valuable time, huge bills for repairs to expensive cars, and enormous waste in the use of gasoline and oil, all of which is the inevitable result of bad roads. And every farmer knows the loss he sustains when forced to haul a halfload of grain many miles to an elevator because of the state of the roads, as compared with the hauling of a full load in less time, and at less labor for his horses, over a good road.

Two main things appear to be required. First, that the haphazard method of road building by municipalities, oft times with inexperienced men in charge, be replaced by systematic planning and work carried out by the Provincial Governments under the direction of qualified engineers and road-making experts. To some slight extent this better method is being followed, but there is still room for its extension. In fact, in all Provinces throughout the West the Provincial Governments should be responsible for the proper construction of all main highways, leaving only the minor local arteries leading into those highways to the care of the municipal councils.

Second, and of equal importance, is the question of the maintenance of the roads once they have been built. Hundreds of thousands of dollars spent in the construction of fairly good roads have been lost, owing to failure to provide proper maintenance and upkeep. There is hardly a district in Western Canada which does not provide such object lessons of almost criminal mismanagement and waste.

The present time, when there is considerable unemployment throughout the country, would seem to suggest itself as a most opportune occasion to embark on an active and well-considered programme of good roads construction throughout the West. True, road-building cannot be carried on during the severe winter months when the ground is frozen, but the programmes could now be made and orders placed for necessary materials, thus providing winter employment in the manufacture of such materials, and then with the completion of seeding next spring thousands of men could be put actively at work and kept steadily employed until harvest and threshing called them into the fields, instead of, as now, bringing tens of thousands of harvest hands into the country for a few weeks' work at high wages right on the eve of winter setting in, hundreds of whom find that their harvest wages are not sufficient to carry them over the winter and they, therefore, become a charge upon the cities and towns into which they drift when threshing is completed.

High Class Settlers Coming into Grande Prairie Country.

Indications point to an era in the immediate future of unprecedented prosperity for Grande Prairie district. The crop is expected to run in value from ten to fifteen million dollars, and there is a large influx of high class settlers, with the introduction of substantial capital. I cannot speak too highly of them for they have been of great assistance to me in my experience of motherhood." ## J. R. Manson for W. Edmonton

About 60 delegates were present in Edmonton last week at the Convention of the U. F. A. Political Association, for the purpose of nominating a candidate in West Edmonton Constituency at the forthcoming Federal election.

Geo. Bevington was in the chair, and among the other delegates were Messrs W. M. Washburn and John Schulz from Stony Plain Local.

The first day was devoted to registration of delegates and appointing committees to handle the business of the convention.

A conference with delegates from the Labor Party was held the second day. The delegates asked that West Edmonton be given to their nominee. This request was refused by the U. F. A.

When nominations were called for, the following were nominated:

J. R. Manson, Woodbend; G. Bevington, Winterburn; S. C. Stevens, Sunnybend; A. R. Brown, Westlock; C. J. Welburne, Winterburn.

On the final ballot, Mr. Manson was chosen as the standard-bearer for the U. F. in this Constituency, the ballot showing 53 votes for Manson and 41 for Bevington.

Mr. Manson is well known in Edmonton, having served on the Board of Alderman, and at one time was candidate for Mayor.

A resolution outlining a method of recalling a representative was finally adopted by the meeting after a series of amendments, this declaring that:

"The candidate shall upon his nomination hand his signed resignation to the Executive of the Association; who shall hold the same and deal with the resignation only at an annual convention; and the candidate shall have an opportunity to explain his action. Only on a vote of 60 per cent of the delegates shall the recall become effective."

A Piggy-Wiggy Trip.

Another trip with the U. F. A. piggy-wigs. We missed the company of our Train Agent and a discourse on tariffs and classifications, but as he had thoughtfully left a signed bill of lading, we were not held up with our car.

This trip we had a charge of $7.93 at the Stockyards for yardage; and, as whatever is mysterious is also an object of suspicion, I determined to find out whether they were soaking me or not.

It turned out to be 7c a head for 15 lambs, 35c a head for 4 head of cattle, 20c for a calf, and 8c a head on 66 hogs.

The schoolboys can check that up. Two years ago yardage on hogs used to be 5 cents.

The Railroad Co. is getting very suspicious of anyone who dirties up their rolling stock with live stock. I had to sign my name on the front of the shipping bill and on the back of it going in on the train. Then, when I went for a half-fare ticket home, I had to sign it once more on the back, and after that the fun began.

The clerk produced a great big yellow-and-green ticket on which were printed the following questions, and which he has to punch an answer against each one upon:

1. Medium, slim, stout.
2. Light hair, dark hair, grey hair.
3. Tall, medium, short.
4. Young, middle-aged, elderly.
5. Beard, mustache, chin, none.

As he did not come from behind the wicket to look at my hair, he made a bad guess and marked it dark instead of fair.

However, the conductor seemed to be pretty easy-going, so did not throw me off the train. I had to sign this ticket once before the conductor and once before the agent.

I am inclined to believe there is a Secret Society in almost every national railway system known as "The Society for the Discouragement of Traffic."

They let the train crews in pretty easily; all they have to do is to throw all bags of chop and mill feeds onto spiked harrows or anything else that will rip them open.

Any man who cannot break a trunk open at the first throw is liable to be disqualified from the Union.

If no agent is at a railway station, sewing machines must have all legs broken first crack.

In the case of farmers loading live stock, all they have to do is to swear at them good and plenty, and this gives them the first degree in the

Bush Fires Across the River.

Fierce bush fires were raging last week in the Genesee district. Messrs McDonald, Petrie and others have suffered heavy losses in hay and straw feed. Backfire guard was burned a few miles west of Telfordville, to prevent the fire coming east.

A party of men went out from Telfordville to help fight back the fire, and barrels of water were hauled out to the fire-infested district, as everyone is more or less short of water in their wells.

Mr John Martin, of Telfordville East, lost a fine straw stack by fire.

A fierce fire also cleaned up pretty well in the Keystone district, but the exact amount of the damage done has not been ascertained as yet.

The prevailing high winds from the west and north have made it difficult for the fire-fighters to get the fire under control.

ROBERT J. C. STEAD

Perhaps it was custom and the subliminal pullings of association that drew her feet down the water across the beach to the edge of the stream that gurgled gently in the still night. She stood on the gravel by the water's edge, packed firm by the wagon-wheels of twenty-five years, and watched her image as it swayed gently in the smoothly running current. There was no moon, but the stars shone down in their midnight brilliance, and the water lay white and gleaming against the black vagueness of the bushy banks. She stooped and let it fondle her fingers. It was warm and smooth. . . . But it was shallow at the ford. . . . Farther up it was quite deep. . . . The stars blinked a strange challenge from the sky, as she thought to say, "Here is the tree of knowledge, if you dare to drink thereof."

At length she turned her back on the stream and retraced her steps up the path. The house loomed very sombre and still in the quiet night. A light shone dimly from her father's window. At intervals a deep, contented sighing came from the cows in the barnyard. She took the path past the house and down to the corral, where she paused, her car arrested by the steady drone of milking. A lantern sitting on the black earth, cast a little circle of light, and threw a doubtful glow in dreadful silhouette against the barn. And for that dim light Beulah discerned the bent form of her mother, milking.

"Mother, this is too much!" the girl exclaimed.

Her mother started and looked up. "You're leaving us, Beulah?" she asked. There was no reproach in her voice, nor even surprise, but a kind of quiet sorrow. I couldn't let the poor brutes suffer," she explained.

"Yes, I'm leaving," said Beulah. "I can't stand it any longer."

The mother sighed. "I've seen it coming for some time," she said, at length. "I suppose it can't be helped."

"You're so fussy," returned the girl, with a touch of impatience. "You make me want to fight. Of course it can be helped, but it can't be helped by always crying. . . ."

"Your father has met one of his own met at last," said the mother, and the girl flushed. "I don't want a note of pride, but whether of father, or daughter, or both, she could only guess. "Well, it's true, your father is a good man, Beulah."

I should send you back to your bed, but somehow I can't. I—I don't blame you, Beulah."

She had finished the last cow. Beulah helped with the pails of milk, and the two women went back to the house together. When Mary had

Headache

Recurring headaches usually come from an exhaustion of the nervous system, and they do not disappear until the vigor of the nerve cells is restored by such up-building treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Temporary relief by use of powders is often obtained at an enormous expense to the nervous system and the general health.

Get the nerves right and the headaches will not return.

Mrs. W. J. Pearce, Nunn St., Cobourg, Ont., writes:

"My system became run-down and I suffered greatly with pain in my head. This was so severe that I would have to bind a cloth lightly about my head so that I could get my work done. A friend advised me the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and after taking the first box I found quite an improvement in my condition. I continued using them until I had taken about six boxes, and my strength and built up my system splendidly, completely relieving the pain in my head."

The Man Who Works Hard Should Follow This Advice

Perseverance and will power he should have, but whether he has strength and vigor is another question. Hard working men often have headaches and suffer from bilious fits. Dr. Hamilton's Pills cure the system and pure tone up the blood, drive away tiredness and lassitudes. He brushed her hands as she took her daughter's face between her palms and kissed her on the cheeks. Slowly Beulah's arms stole about her neck, and it took all the steel in her nature to prevent surrender.

"It's not you I'm going from," she murmured to say, "I write to you of ten, and we'll surely meet before long. I've just got to. There's no other way out."

"Stay till morning, Beulah. Your father may be disposed to give and take a little then, and you'll do same, won't you? . . . Oh, my girl, don't break up your home like this!"

"You can't break up what you haven't got. Aside from you, why should I call this place home? I work for my board and clothes. Well, I can work other places, and get my board and clothes. If I've got to be a housewife, I'll be a housewife. I will at least choose the machine."

"What plans have you made?"

"Haven't made any plans, and don't know where I'm going. But I'm going to get a present for my mother. I plan to come along as they need."

"Have you any money?" asked the mother, with a briar effect of cheerfulness. "She was already planning for her daughter in the new world she was about to enter."

"Enough to start me. That's all I need. I can earn more. It's not money I'm after, although I suppose father won't be able to see it that way. He'll put all this down to lastness and obstinacy. It's neither. It's just a plain human craving to live."

"I sometimes wonder whether I'll be able to stand it through to the end. My mother whispered, somewhat fearfully, as though frightened by the admission. "I've—I've seen it coming with you, and I can't help feeling that perhaps this is only the beginning."

"Oh, mother, if you should!" cried the girl. "That would do it. I'd see then that there is something in the world besides wheat and cows after all. You know, I think he's in a kind of trance. He's mesmerized by wheat. It was no necessary in those first years, when he was fighting against actual starvation, that it has become a kind of mania. Nothing short of some great shock will bring him out of it."

If you would come—if you would only come too, things would be different."

"But I couldn't do that," said the mother, after a silence, and as though speaking with herself. "He's my husband, Beulah. You don't understand."

They talked then, in secret, wonderful confidence, of many things, things for their ears only, and the grey was returning in the northern sky when the girl again left the house, and this time swung resolutely down the road that led to Plainville. Her heart was now at rest, even at peace. In the sacred communion of that last hour she had come to see something of her mother's problem and sacrifice; and although she was going out into the world alone, she felt that somewhere, some time, was a solution that would reunite the broken family and tune their varying chords in harmony. The North star shone very brightly amid the myriad finer points of light that filled the heavens. She raised her face to the cold rays. "The stars had always a strange fascination for her. Their blimble distance, their infinite number, their ordered procession—all appealed to her a Purpose. That was bigger than wheat and land and money, a Purpose that was life the life for which she groped vaguely but bravely in the darkness."

From an unhappy sleep in his room upstairs John Harris was awakened by the whine of the cream separator. A quiet smile stole across his strong, still handsome face. "Beulah has decided to be sensible," he whispered to himself.

In the morning the Harris household was astir early as usual. The farmer and his son gave their attention to the horses while Mary prepared breakfast, and it was not until they were seated at the table that Harris noticed his daughter's absence.

"Where's Beulah?" he demanded.

"I don't know," his wife replied.

"Ain't she up yet?"

"I don't know," Harris arose from the table and went upstairs. He entered his daughter's room without knocking. The bed had not been slept in, and a strange apprehension suddenly tightened about his chest. He returned quickly to the kitchen.

"Mary," he said, "I want to know where Beulah is."

"I can't tell you where she is, John. She left here last night."

"Left here? Do you mean that she has run away?"

"Not just that, perhaps, but she has gone, and I'm not looking for her back for a while. The mother's voice was dry, and she talked in the restraint of subdued emotion."

"And you knew she was going?"

"I knew before she left. I didn't."

"No. You didn't think it was worth mentioning to me. Just a matter we could talk about any time, I suppose you thought I wouldn't care."

"Well, you didn't seem to care very much, John. You gave your orders and went to bed. Beulah could obey or get out. You might have known she had enough of your own spirit to soon settle that question. She settled it just as you would have settled it if you had been in her place."

"Oh, of course, I'm to blame for the whole thing," said Harris, and his throat was thick as he spoke. His daughter was very dear to him, and that she would leave him had never entered his head. Why should she? Wasn't he a good father? Didn't he give her a good home, with plenty to eat and wear, and a little money to spend from time to time, and no questions asked? What more could a man do for that? Already his heart was crying out for his daughter—the cry of broken strings which never knew their strength until they broke.

He should show emotion, or cry, or press regret for anything he had done, mend, surrender, and if there was one thing he was sincerely sorry for was his surrender. Not that he felt he had done anything wrong, or even imprudent; he was sincerely sorry for what had happened, but not for his part in it. And, lest gentleness should be his, he was sincerely sorry for his real feelings in sharp words to his wife.

"Of course, you must take her part. I suppose you advised her to go. . . . It was an awful thing for me to tell her she must do her work, but a small thing for her to run away. Well, she goes like I like it. . . . It she thinks I'm going to litch up a bunzy and go chasing around the neighbourhood, begging her to come back, she's mistaken. She's gone for her own free will, and she can come back of the same or not at all."

"I wouldn't look for her back too soon," remarked Allan. "Look to me as though this thing had not been figured out ahead. Jim went yesterday morning; Beulah goes last night. Just a chance if they ain't married by this time."

"So that's it, is it?" exclaimed Harris, jumping up from his untouched breakfast. There was a fierce light in his eye and determination in his face that boded ill to any who opposed him. He seized his wife roughly by the shoulder. "And you were a party to this, were you? You—you wouldn't even stop at that? Well, I'll stop it. I'll stop him. If I do it with a bullet, I'll show him whether any—any hired man—can cross me in a matter of my own family."

His wife had risen, and was clinging to his wrists, half for protection, half in supplication. "Now, John, she pleaded, "don't be rash. You don't know that Beulah's gone with Jim, and you haven't a word of proof of it."

"Proof? What more proof do I want? When did ever Beulah carry on like this before? Didn't she always do as she was told? And haven't they been thick as molasses since white back? Wasn't it over wanting time with her that Jim got fired, and she came back of the same or not at all?"

Tanlac Accomplishes Remarkable Results In Geo. H. Nickels Case

Prominent Wisconsin Man Says Tanlac Promptly Relieved Him of Bad Case of Stomach Trouble of Six Months' Standing—Gains 27 Pounds and Feels Fine As a Fiddle.

GEORGE H. NICKELS.

It is an unquestionable fact that Tanlac is now being more widely endorsed by well known men and women than any other medicine on the American market. One of the latest to testify is George H. Nickels, well known lecturer, residing at 227 Wells St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

"Tanlac has not only completely restored my health, but I have actually gained 27 pounds in weight," said Mr. Nickels in referring to the remarkable benefit he had derived from the medicine.

"For something over six months, my stomach was very badly disordered. I suffered terribly from indigestion and dyspepsia. At times I would be in great distress and I would invariably experience an uncomfortable bloating feeling for hours after eating. I had no appetite, and the little I ate would often make me deathly sick. My head ached until I felt like it would burst and I was so nervous I trembled like a leaf. When I got up in the mornings, I was so weak and dizzy, I couldn't trust myself to walk, and I just hurt all over."

"Tanlac has brought about a wonderful change in my condition for I am now enjoying the very best of health. My appetite is splendid, I relish my meals. Everything agrees with me. My stomach is no longer nervous, and my head aches and dizzy spells are all gone."

and not a word of admission of the real facts from him? What more do you want than that? And on top of it all you help her away, and keep it a secret from me as long as you can. I daresay you knew their plans from the first. You thought I wouldn't be interested in that, either."

According To Statistics Improvement Is Shown As To Employment

Ottawa.—The employment situation in Canada registers an improvement. Returns of the employment service, Department of Labor, show that for the two-week period ending September 10 the volume of employment reported by employers showed expansion, the index number standing at 85.6 as compared with 83.7 in the preceding fortnight. Since the beginning of April, in fact, employment has shown a slightly upward tendency, although in volume it still continues on the mid-winter level.

For the two weeks ending September 10 returns were tabulated from 5,240 firms with an aggregate payroll of some 669,201 persons. For the two weeks ending August 27 identical firms reported 660,274 employees, the difference representing an increase of 8,927 or over 8,900 workers or a little less than 1.2 per cent.

Sixteen industrial groups registered expansions in payrolls as compared with the preceding fortnight, amounting altogether to nearly 11,900 persons. On the other hand, there were recessions in 15 groups aggregating over 2,600 workers. The most important factor in the net increase was the reopening in railway car shops following a temporary shutdown. Without this recovery, however, employment would still have shown an upward tendency as compared with the preceding fortnight.

Geneva.—The Council of the League of Nations has reached a final decision on the Upper Silesia question, and has thereby accomplished the greatest task yet set for its consideration with greater dispatch than many expected. The solution reached by the Council involves a new frontier line, together with certain measures providing for guarantees against the dislocation of existing economic conditions.

The members of the Council are confident that this solution is the only possible one, and that it will at the same time roll away one of the dark clouds hovering over Europe and firmly establish the prestige of the League.

A statement issued by the League says that, confronted by the extreme difficulty of reconciling the economic elements of the question, the Council first of all charged a committee, composed of Belgian, Brazilian, Chinese and Spanish delegates, with the study of the problem. The committee reached the conclusion that a frontier drawn either in accordance with the plebiscite or the economic conditions without other stipulations, was bound to have unfortunate results.

The committee accordingly recommended a new frontier, together with a guarantee against the dislocation of existing economic conditions extending over a period long enough to permit the region to adapt itself to the new economic situation. The committee also requested experts to study general measures, the application of which would assure continuity of the economic life of Upper Silesia and reduce to a minimum the difficulties during the period of change.

The economic stipulations formulated by the experts provided for the application over a fixed period, in some cases extending to 13 years, of a series of arrangements respecting railways and water and electric supplies, as well as the suppression of custom duties on numerous articles, including wine and coal, and the maintenance of the German mark as legal currency in the regions ceded to Poland.

The Council recommends with adoption of these plans together with other of a guarantee relative to political minorities, believing the latter to be an essential complement to the establishment of a political frontier.

The National Crisis

"My appeal is to the whole people; to every man and woman who wants to do right by this country; to everyone who breathes the spirit of our fathers who founded this British Dominion."

—ARTHUR MEIGHEN

THE Election to be held December 6th will be the most momentous in Canadian history; for as men and women vote will depend the economic stability, the political stability and, indeed, the national stability of this country.

Today we find group striving against group, class against class, the industrial and financial structure of the country assailed by false and unsound doctrines and theories, while our great neighbour to the south has adopted a trade exclusion policy directed against Canada's vast agricultural interests.

The currencies of nearly every country in the world are depreciated. The Canadian dollar in the United States is subject to a heavy discount causing a loss of over one hundred million dollars in exchange annually.

Europe is overwhelmed with war debts—unemployment is acute—and the restoration to pre-war conditions is slow.

While Canada is in a much more favorable condition than many countries, yet there is evidence of stagnation, instability, unemployment and lack of confidence.

Taxes are heavy because of the country's efforts in the Great War, but have become burdensome on account of the misconceived policies and blunders of Governments that directed Canada's affairs prior to 1911.

These conditions are largely the direct aftermath of the war, but they must be dealt with fearlessly and constructively. This is no time to consider experimental changes, or the theories of visionaries.

This is no time for Crecr and his Free Trade policy.

This is no time for King and his wobbling "charted" policies, varying with each provincial boundary.

It is the time to cling to orderly, stable Government in the interest of all the people; to be guided by the experience of the past, proceeding upon lines that have been proven sound.

It is the time to place the destinies of Canada again in the hands of a Government led by a sane, courageous Canadian who has safely brought the country through the trying years of reconstruction, and upon whom we can rely to retain and initiate policies in the interest, not of a group or class but of all the people.

It is the time to support Arthur Meighen and his Candidates.

Manson's Candidature Void.

Following the meetings last week of the U. F. West Edmonton Convention, when Mr. Manson was chosen as candidate for this constituency, the Executive of the Association has declared the nomination void.

Another convention to choose a candidate will be held Wednesday, Nov. 2, in Edmonton.

The annulment of the proceedings of the Convention was owing to the claim made, that Woodbend, Graminia, and Clymont locals were over-represented—having had 17 delegates when entitled to only 4. Manson's majority over Bevington was 12.

Surprise Party at Comet.

On Saturday evening last the 15th, about thirty young people gathered at the home of Mr and Mrs Murd McKinlay, to surprise Miss Sarah, on the anniversary of her birthday.

The surprise was a great success. A large bon-fire was one of the features of the evening's fun. Games, songs and music, with a delicious midnight lunch, completed the evening's merry-making. Among the guests were Mr and Mrs Dan McKinlay and daughters; Mr and Mrs Barker and family, of Carvel; Miss Marjorie Anderson and Miss Mabelle Clarke of Stony Plain; Game Warden and Mrs Lawton and family, of Edmonton, and many others, who all joined in wishing Miss Sarah many more such happy occasions.
